Indigita launches simplified cross-border compliance solution

Geneva, 27 January 2020 – Swiss regtech Indigita, has released a new and simplified version of its popular “inApp” solution to offer situation-based information on cross-border regulations for banks and other financial institutions of all sizes. The web application takes complexity out of cross-border client interactions, allowing relationship managers to fully focus on client needs.

Indigita’s new solution, builds on the company’s successful inApp web application and introduces a new level of simplicity to the management of cross-border client interactions. The web application, which can be accessed from laptops, smartphones or tablets, provides relationship managers with quick and efficient access to context-dependent cross-border information right when it matters. Answers are clearly visualised, with activities being labelled as either compliant, non-compliant or falling into a regulatory grey area.

Compared to the previous inApp solution, the new version of inApp has been further simplified, while covering the full spectrum of banking and investment services. Based on the respective context and guided by an interactive interface, relationship managers obtain clear guidance on how to interact with clients and prospects, allowing them to focus on delivering their best service and advice. The transparent pay- per- use pricing model particularly allows smaller financial institutions to benefit from leading cross-border regulations know-how without prohibitive expenses up front.

Indigita CEO Achille Deodato said about the new offering: “The new version of inApp is the latest result of our continuing quest to make navigating today’s complex regulatory landscape as simple as possible. We’re excited to offer an easy to use product that takes the guesswork out of conducting financial business across borders, allowing relationship managers to fully focus on their clients’ needs.”

As with any of Indigita’s solutions, the new version of inApp applies strict security standards and is hosted on a Swiss-based cloud computing infrastructure. The web application is available with a standard user interface or as a white label solution, which can be adapted to a company’s corporate design. The new version of inApp is available to customers as of now and can be set up within hours.
